

[...]

The infernal storm that inundates the street and bespatters my window whilst I am writing, equal to Dante's 'Poggia maledetta eterna e greve,' confounding all season, and cloaking the face of day, makes it indeed totally indifferent what month I picked for travel, even to those who have only to please themselves in choosing.

[...]